Ms Shirley Harris 80 Thomson Street Ashburton 7700	pCARP-1032/1033	Farmers now engage in many different varieties of crop cultivation techniques, all of which aim to minimise environmental impacts, including burning. The amount of crop residue burn offs are significantly less these days due to major technology and machinery progressions. However, some crop rotations that are required to meet the necessary bio-physical standards for food production may necessitate such burn offs from time to time. Farmers are aware of the issues around burn offs and aim to minimise environmental effects as these effects will largely affect their own properties in the first instance.	Oppose
