It is important that this strategy maintains control of all wilding operations including the removal of those on Council reserves in communities. If it is left to a community under the auspices of a district council, using the vehicle of their reserves management plan can lead to a situation where personal views can overtake the requirements for all other land owners and occupiers under the regulations. It would allow a case of a community "wittingly allowing wilding spread". Neighbouring land would not then be "prevented from spillover" .
