Reasons comment:

For the foreseeable future this mine activity is an essential service. The current pandemic makes it quite clear that hospitals, schools and primary industries all rely on coal fired boilers currently. For the health system alone it is critical. Primary industries will support NZ recovering from this current crisis and any that follow so it is essential to us. If schools are closed due to lack of coal it is a burden to all family and extended family members who have to work and care for the children who cannot attend school because there is no heating. The way the company mines is as environmentally friendly as it can be currently and no doubt will adapt to new techniques if they become good practice.
