Reasons comment:

The recent pandemic and global shut down has shown how much of an adverse effect humans have had on the atmosphere. Examples being the Himalaya becoming visible from over 150 km away for the first time in decades and improvements in air quality in many large cities world wide. This improvement in air quality is largely down to the massive reduction in fossil fuel use over the last 3 months. As a country we have led the world in showing how to deal with a pandemic. We should lead the world by not increasing fossil fuel production and aim to stop production here. The global economy is widely forecast to be severely impacted by the pandemic. It is unlikely that the world will rapidly go back to what it was like 5 months ago. Expanding a mine for something which may not be in demand is not a wise thing to do.
