You have missed the potential harm done by the ETS. I have a small farm and every farmer I have spoken to has had the same experience. We would make more money by 'farming' carbon and planting exotics. For some of us this is the more marginal paddocks, but for many it is the whole farm. Unless a market for native forest and biodiversity are developed soon areas that might have been allowed to regenerate will be planted with exotics. Biodiversity will be reduced, long term carbon sequestration will be reduced and employment will be lower. Ecan needs to be leading on this subject.
