Making public transport by removing the fee will encourage wider and frequent use. This will reduce the number of cars on our roads but more importantly it will be a step to take climate action by reducing CO2 emissions. It will also help to encourage families with lower income to further education, with an easily accessible form of transport.

Yes

An immediate response (yesterday) to help companies with large CO2 emissions reduce their impact including industrial, and agricultural practices. Offering these companies support and incentives to reduce. More legal consequences to unsustainable practices. Workshops regarding climate change in businesses. Forming connections between human and environment, Māori worldview.

Any other comments on future funding for responding to climate change?

Climate Change is our biggest threat, funding needs to be prioritised to adaptation and mitigation strategies. Mental health help regarding eco anxiety needs to be implemented into school settings, they will be the ones battling the consequences.
