It would encourage more people to use public transport where possible, helping those who may be experiencing financial hardship get to places they need to be, without having to use the money they need for other important things, just to get to work or uni etc. It would also encourage more people to use public transport where possible instead of driving everywhere, reducing traffic congestion, as well as air pollution.

Is borrowing and repaying through general rates the right approach for this regionally significant event?

Don't know
